SESSION 1.

Demonstrate an understanding of criteria for working as a member of a team.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
1	Demonstrate an understanding of criteria for working as a member of a team.	5

Working on teams can be rewarding, but at times it can be difficult and downright frustrating. If there are poor communicators on your team, you may often feel left in the dark, confused or misunderstood. To create a successful team, effective communication methods are necessary for both team members and leaders. Even though some people understand their communication skills need improving, many aren't certain how to improve them. So, in the following article, we've outlined how to avoid some common team blunders as well as some helpful advice on how to be a better teammate or leader overall. Go… team!

If You're a Team Member

Communicate, Communicate, Communicate

If you have a problem with someone in your group, talk to him about it. Letting bad feelings brew will only make you sour and want to isolate yourself from the group. Not only does it feel good to get it out, but it will be better for the team in the long run.

Don't Blame Others

People in your group lose respect for you if you're constantly blaming others for not meeting deadlines. You're not fooling anyone, people know who isn't pulling his weight in a group. Pointing the finger will only make you look cowardly. Group members understand if you have a heavy workload and weren't able to meet a deadline. Saying something like, "I'm really sorry, but I'll get it to you by the end of today." will earn you a lot more respect than trying to make it seem like it's everyone else's fault that you missed your deadline.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
2	What are selection criteria and why are they used?	6

Selection criteria describe the qualifications, knowledge, skills, abilities and experience a person requires in order to do a job effectively. They are divided into:

- essential criteria
- desirable criteria.

You must meet the essential criteria to be considered for a position because without having the relevant qualifications, knowledge, skills or experience you would not be able to do the job. If you do not meet the essential criteria, you will not be shortlisted for interview.

It is not necessary for you to have the qualifications, knowledge, skills and experience described by the desirable criteria, but your chances of being shortlisted are better if you do. Where there are several applicants who meet the essential criteria, the selection panel will shortlist on the basis of the desirable criteria.

Examples of selection criteria

Apart from qualifications and experience that may be specific to a particular job, there are several selection criteria that are common to many University positions. These include:

- ability to maintain confidentiality
- ability to work as part of a team
- ability to work independently
- ability to work under pressure
- attention to detail
- flexible and adaptable approach to work
- initiative
- keyboard skills
- knowledge of University organisation, policy and procedures
- organisational/planning skills
- problem-solving ability
- sensitivity
- supervisory skills
- verbal communication/interpersonal skills
- written communication skills.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
3	Describe the Importance of a Good Team Player	8

Teams are created for several reasons. They may need to deliver a one-time project, or work together on an ongoing basis. Either way, if you take advantage of a group's collective energy and creativity, the team can accomplish much more in less time.What does this mean for you? Well, teams are probably an integral part of how things are done in your organization. If you show that you have the ability to work well with others, this could have a major impact on your career.Being a valuable team member can open new career opportunities, because leaders may see firsthand what a great job you're doing. You may even be invited to bring your strengths into play in another team setting – and in higher profile, business-critical projects. This is why learning to be a good team player is so important. If you make a good impression, you never know what possibilities might open for you.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
4	Explain behaviors' conducive to working as a member of a team	8

When building a new team, an obstacle you, as the team leader, will face is expectations and behaviors not conducive to team work – especially if your team is diverse or competitive. You can overcome these challenges by establishing guidelines for team conduct early on in the team-building stage. This will improve your chances of building a unified team. When everyone is following the same guidelines, competitive tendencies tend to dissipate and team members get along better, focusing their efforts and ambitions on achieving team goals.Establishing a code of conduct that all team members agree to and commit to offers several team benefits:

- it outlines expected behavior
- it promotes shared responsibility for team accomplishments
- it decreases misunderstandings, and
- it increases productivity

You can write effective guidelines by applying three basic criteria: write guidelines using one clear, concise sentence; state guidelines in a positive way; and make sure guidelines are actionable.Guidelines for team conductAll team interactions should be guided by what's best for the team. A code of conduct can help guide acceptable behaviors and actions, helping to create a high-performance team. Team success depends largely on the code of conduct being followed. So, as team leader, it's important that you set a good example by following guidelines yourself. Leading by example will help to establish the credibility of the guidelines and demonstrate the expectation that everyone must follow them.There are several other types of guidelines that every team should develop to address areas of team behavior:

- Etiquette for team meetings – Establishing guidelines for meeting etiquette helps you manage meetings so they remain as productive as possible. Meeting etiquette guidelines involve attendance, interruptions, confidentiality, and action orientation.
- Open approach to communication – As team leader, you need to create a team atmosphere where team members feel comfortable contributing and sharing. Because team members must work closely to achieve team goals, they must be able to work harmoniously while being productive. Work to make sure your team is free from critical and damaging communication, such as sarcasm, ridicule, and any other counterproductive behavior.

- Handling conflict – Some team leaders hope they can avoid conflict on their teams, but this isn't realistic. Conflicts over schedules, priorities, resources, and different approaches to work are common and you need to be prepared to handle them. When your team is locked in a conflict, you can use three approaches to handling conflict: compromising, collaborating, and confronting.
- Decision making – Because decision making is done by the team, not a higher authority, it tends to be more complex than in nonteam situations. As team leader, you must work with your team to establish a decision-making process. Part of this is deciding who'll make decisions and who'll be accountable for them. It's important to establish a decision-making process early on to avoid conflict. Conflict within a team impacts productivity and can potentially lead to the failure to meet team objectives.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
5	WHAT IS TEAM DYNAMICS?	8

The work place, social organizations, community groups and sports all use teams to accomplish goals. The dynamics of teams determine if these goals will be met in an efficient manner. Identifying team dynamics and understanding positive and negative outcomes that may occur due to the dynamics will assist you to achieve team efforts.

Description

According to Psychology Campus, a group of people that share and work toward accomplishing a common goal are referred to as a team. The dynamics of a team depend on each team member. Unseen forces that exist in a team between different people or groups are called team dynamics and can strongly influence how a team reacts, behaves or performs. Many factors influence team dynamics, such as personalities of team members, how the team operates, how the team views itself and the team's organization.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
6	How Can Team Dynamics Be Managed Constructively?	2

You need to:

a. look for the team dynamics - the 'natural forces' at play
b. determine whether they are acting for good or ill,
c. Make interventions to make the effect of those dynamics more positive.

For example, if a wall of cupboards is inhibiting communication within a group, that wall can be repositioned and the room layout designed to encourage communication (without making the environment too uncomfortable for those who value their privacy when working on individual tasks).

Example: The Impact of A Friendship

The positive effect of a strong friendship in a team might be:

- The friends communicate a lot together...
- ...which naturally results in other members being drawn into the discussion
- ...which results in a good 'social' feel to the group
- ...which makes people enjoy being in the group
- ...which improves motivation and commitment

The negative effect of a strong friendship might be:

- To cause the other four people to feel excluded...
- ...which means they are less likely to include the two friends in decision making
- ...which means that there are likely to be two sub-groups
- ...which means that information may not flow across the whole group, but only within the subgroups
- ...which means that miscommunication may lead to misunderstanding and poor collective performance

This friendship has an impact on the group's performance, and is therefore a team dynamic. Whether it is good or bad depends on other factors. In the first, positive, example, there is a natural force of "inclusion" which results in people being drawn into productive discussions. In the second, negative example, there is a natural force of "exclusion" which results in communication between groups being stifled.

SESSION 2.

Work autonomously and collaborate with other team members.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
7	Describe what makes great teams be such?	5

Is it a matter of coincidental matters that some teams perform systematically above average or being a high performance team is due to specific traits of those that make the team up?

When your team is motivated to do a better a job, you are giving them a reason to excel so that your business will thrive. However, motivating your employees is not an easy task and requires a strategic plan. Once you learn how to motivate a team and the various steps that it entails, you should also be prepared to embrace them and use them on a regular basis.

Great high performing teams leverage strong shared beliefs and goals among other key characteristics to perform systematically above others.

Generally, high performance collaboration teams have very strong motivation for what they do and for the end result that their work produces. They deeply share a common set of beliefs and support each other under all circumstances.

But which are the unique characterizing beliefs so vital to the smooth and efficient performance of this new popular animal which is the small work team?

Ken Thompson, author of the breakthrough Bioteaming Manifesto, has nailed this belief set down and provides an academic, but very punctual and precise roundup on its makeup.

If you are into growing your first extended collaboration team, I strongly suggest you look into this and take the words in it as rare and precious advice.

In my personal experience, the great teams I have worked in, even in very recent times, have all shared, often very openly, the set of common beliefs that Ken has identified so well.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
8	Explain the positive outcomes of achieving the objective if it benefits your team members.	10

By incorporating this team motivating step, you are putting the control of their future compensation into their own hands.

Build a sense of curiosity within your team member's mindsets so that that they are interested enough to want to achieve the goals you expect. By doing this, your team members will want to learn more. This can be achieved if you understand what excites or interests your team members.

Establish a plan of action that requires cooperation between team members so that they are forced to work together to achieve that goal. This may just mean that a project is divided into tasks that need to be accomplished by each member of the team.

Challenge your team members to achieve an objective. Make sure that they understand what you expect as a goal. Don't set them up to fail. Establish a realistic goal and provide a tool that shows their progress as they get closer to attaining that goal. For example, if you have a project that needs completing, create a chart that breaks that project into smaller goals so that, as they achieve each step, they can check it off and visualize themselves getting closer to completing the project.

Create a competitive environment that will inspire your team members to achieve their goals. For example, break your team up into smaller teams and have them each be responsible for an aspect of the complete goal. Introduce an incentive that will inspire them, but make it a friendly competition and not one that brings about hostility and back stabbing.

Put your team members in control of their own destiny when instilling team motivation. You can have an objective that needs to be met, but passing that sense of control over each of your team members will give them the feeling that achieving the goal is something they want done.

Design a tool for recognition when motivating your team. By doing this, team members know that their individual efforts will be noticed and not lost as a team effort. This will inspire all members to do their share. If members know that they will only be rewarded and recognized as a team, they may be more inclined to hide behind the efforts of others. This in turn, may cause resentment amongst those who did all the work.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
9	Describe theAuthority levels of all team members	5

Choosing Authority Levels for Team Members

Empowerment is often incorrectly perceived as a binary choice. Either you empower someone, or you don't. In reality, your options are more varied than that. We can distinguish between different levels of authority.

"Empowerment is a continuous variable; people can be viewed as more or less empowered, rather than empowered or not empowered." - G.M. Spreitzer

In your very first driving lesson your driving instructor may have given you the steering wheel, but I'm sure he told you exactly when to go left and when to go right. But after a number of lessons, when you had gained some experience, he might have said "Let's drive to the shopping center, where you almost rammed a phone booth last week," and it would have been your job to find a way to get there. And with a really experienced driver, the instructor might have said "Why don't you drive around a bit? Mind if I take a nap?"

or each individual activity we can distinguish seven levels of authority(modified from Susan M. Heathfield):

- Level 1: Tell: You make decisions and announce them to your people. (This is actually not empowerment at all.)
- Level 2: Sell: You make decisions, but you attempt to gain commitment from workers by "selling" your idea to them.
- Level 3: Consult: You invite and weigh input from workers before coming to a decision. But you make it clear that it's you who is making the decisions.
- Level 4: Join: You invite workers to join in a discussion and to reach consensus as a group. Your voice is equal to the others.
- Level 5: Advise: You attempt to influence workers by telling them what your opinion is, but ultimately you leave it up to them to decide.
- Level 6: Confirm: You let the team decide first, with the suggestion that it would be nice, though not strictly necessary, if they are able to convince you afterward.
- Level 7: Delegate: You leave it entirely up to the team to deal with the matter, while you go out and have a good time.

SESSION 3.

Contribute to building relations between team members and stakeholders.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
10	Explain the importance of building relations between team members and stakeholders	9

Relationship building informs planning, but how much is enough?

It seems somewhat intuitive to perform a certain level of research on stakeholders or team members prior to project engagement. My experience has shown me that doing more homework on stakeholders can help with timeline estimations. In addition, there is considerable value to be gained in building relationships with stakeholders to understand their backgrounds and skill sets.

There are some questions though:

- To what extent can this research be performed?
- How much time do we realistically have to get to know stakeholders before the business demands estimated project timelines?
- Do you believe there is a link between getting to know stakeholders and project planning?

Building relationships is just as important within the project team as it is outside. Good relationships can be the difference between outstanding success and dismal failure because it's all about getting people to like and trust you so that they will deliver what you need them to deliver at the right time in the right way.

We have talked previously about managing stakeholders, finding out about and managing their needs and expectations, however this is much easier if you have developed good relationships with stakeholders in the first place.

Networking Helps Build Relationships

Networking (internal and external) is essentially about building solid business relationships. To do this you need good skills in creating rapport and listening.

If you can make a connection with people on subjects you have a genuine interest in, their confidence in you will grow. Use this connection to engage them and then ask genuine questions and just listen. They'll often tell you what you need to know. Strong bonds will inevitably stem from commonalities discovered in simple conversation.

Getting Personal

Building good relationships means being truly interested in the people you deal with, both from a business and personal view. While discussing business issues is usually the main purpose of speaking with someone, finding out something personal about them takes the relationship to the next level.

Learning about hobbies, special interests, family, accomplishments, leisure time activities, organisation memberships, and special dates such as birthdays will help you make a deeper connection with them.

The important thing is what you do with the information. When dealing with team members, suppliers, clients and stakeholders try to mix personal information in the conversation. Every contact doesn't have to be about business. It's about peeling away the layers of formality and resistance to improve your chances of achieving what you want to achieve from the interaction.

Establish a Culture That Favours Relationships

The best project managers are those that develop a good sense of community within the project team. Establishing a healthy culture as part of that community can help win the hearts and minds of clients, staff and suppliers. Culture is about sharing values and a healthy culture will be one that has people who care about each other. In projects it's about creating a 'community' within the project team that shares a common purpose.

It's not just a nice idea. A healthy culture can give a team an edge both in performance and in attracting good quality team members which is of vital importance. A good culture includes (often unspoken) expectations about the way things are done. In a project team these can be about how members respond to inquiries, how they greet each other, and how they behave when the pressure is on.

It's about treating people with respect and listening to their point of view. This doesn't mean you have to agree, but it does mean you respect their right to think differently and to express their views.

Cultures need leaders to set expectations and offer guidance on what's important. As a project manager you will need to be aware that people are watching you for clues as to how to behave in relationships with others. Actions speak louder than words.

Supplier Relationships

The contractual relationship is often one that's all about who has the power. One of the best ways that project managers can improve their supplier relationships is to develop loyalty. Loyalty is a two-way street and to earn trust of suppliers, project team members need to demonstrate their value. It includes being professional and respectful in dealings with suppliers, being efficient in delivery of orders and specifications and working one-on-one when the supplier needs it.

In essence, it's about remembering that suppliers are people too and will respond well to a personal touch. When making a judgment about how their client will be treated, a supplier can't help but consider how he or she is treated by that organisation. Project managers can cultivate supplier loyalty through open and honest communication. Keep them informed about major decisions and show them you have thought about how decisions will impact on them.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
11	What do we mean by stakeholders and their interests?	7

Stakeholders are those who may be affected by or have an effect on an effort. They may also include people who have a strong interest in the effort for academic, philosophical, or political reasons, even though they and their families, friends, and associates are not directly affected by it.

One way to characterize stakeholders is by their relationship to the effort in question.

- Primary stakeholders are the people or groups that stand to be directly affected, either positively or negatively, by an effort or the actions of an agency, institution, or organization. In some cases, there are primary stakeholders on both sides of the equation: a regulation that benefits one group may have a negative effect on another. A rent control policy, for example, benefits tenants, but may hurt landlords.
- Secondary stakeholders are people or groups that are indirectly affected, either positively or negatively, by an effort or the actions of an agency, institution, or organization. A program to reduce domestic violence, for instance, could have a positive effect on emergency room personnel by reducing the number of cases they see. It might require more training for police to help them handle domestic violence calls in a different way. Both of these groups would be secondary stakeholders.
- Key stakeholders, who might belong to either or neither of the first two groups, are those who can have a positive or negative effect on an effort, or who are important within or to an organization, agency, or institution engaged in an effort. The director of an organization might be an obvious key stakeholder, but so might the line staff – those who work directly with participants – who carry out the work of the effort. If they don't believe in what they're doing or don't do it well, it might as well not have begun. Other examples of key stakeholders might be funders, elected or appointed government officials, heads of businesses, or clergy and other community figures who wield a significant amount of influence.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
12	Distinguish the two: ✓ Primary stakeholders ✓ Secondary Stakeholders	11

Primary stakeholders

1. Beneficiaries or targets of the effort. Beneficiaries are those who stand to gain something – services, skills, money, goods, social connection, etc. – as a direct result of the effort. Targets are those who may or may not stand to gain personally, or whose actions represent a benefit to a particular (usually disadvantaged) population or to the community as a whole.

Some examples are:

- A particular population – a racial or ethnic group, a socio-economic group, residents of a housing project, etc.
- Residents of a particular geographic area – a neighborhood, a town, a rural area.
- People experiencing or at risk for a particular problem or condition – homelessness, lack of basic skills, unemployment, diabetes.
- People involved or participants in a particular organization or institution – students at a school, youth involved in the justice system, welfare recipients.
- People whose behavior the effort aims to change – delinquent youth, smokers, people who engage in unsafe sex, people who don't exercise.
- Policy makers and agencies that are the targets of advocacy efforts.

Secondary Stakeholders

2. Those directly involved with or responsible for beneficiaries or targets of the effort. These might include individuals and organizations that live with, are close to, or care for the people in question, and those that offer services directly to them. Among these you might find:

- Parents, spouses, siblings, children, other family members, significant others, friends.
- Schools and their employees – teachers, counselors, aides, etc.
- Doctors and other medical professionals, particularly primary care providers.
- Social workers and psychotherapists.
- Health and human service organizations and their line staff – youth workers, welfare case workers, etc.
- Community volunteers in various capacities, from drivers to volunteer instructors in training programs to those who staff food pantries and soup kitchens.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
13	Give a detailed explanation on ways to communicate with Your Stakeholders	7

The most important element in stakeholder communications is identifying the target audience. Be deliberate and seek out input from all known groups to find the unknown groups. It can be tough when too late in the project a critical person or group is identified that has not received any of the communication through course of project and has valuable links that need to be addressed. So make sure you avoid this scenario and take all the steps early to create a document with all stakeholders you need to manage communication with. Once you have that the ways below can help you keep communication active, frequent and ongoing collaboration so there is strong support for you project.

Formal Methods for Communicating– If they don't exist already, create them. Make occasions when info should be presented.

1. Meetings – One of the most common ways to communicate. They can vary from only 1 person to thousands based on message and audience appropriate. It is up to you to maximize every minute of the time spent to have dialogue. Make sure it is a dialogue and not a monologue. It is the best way as you have the verbal and non verbal cues that enhance the communication and avoid misinterpretation.
2. Conference Calls– These days this is the most common as it does not require the time and expense of travel. The dialogue can take place though its dependant on voice intonation and clarity of the verbal message. They only require cost of phone call and there are many paid and free services that will facilitate use of a conference call line for many people to dial into. Its also a common way for classes to be recorded and replayed when its convenient for you.
3. Newsletters/ Email/ Posters – This strategy is one way communication and utilizes emailed updates, hard copy brochures, posters, newsletters mailed or emailed. One of the weaknesses is that messages are delivered and you cannot guage if they were read and understood, deleted as sometimes there is no feedback. That immediate feedback is valuable for strengthening your message and making sure impacts and feedback are quickly received.

Informal Methods – It is important to not only rely on formal channels but to utilize informal communication as well. The impromptu channels are often more information rich and critical for relationship building.

4. Hallway Conversations, Bathroom conversations – These meetings are great for one on one communication, but also be clear and do not establish false expectations with casual comments dropped.
5. Lunch Meetings, Drink at the bar after work – These casual environments can be great for connecting, getting feedback, ideas, and work to build support
6. Sporting events – tennis, golf, etc are an easy forum to get the input on what support exists, feedback on ideas, brainstorming to strengthen your communication and build stakeholder support
7. Voice mail – this is often underutilized since email is so common but still shown to be more often listened to than an email will be read. By using voice intonation for excitement, urgency, etc it can be more compelling. This can be a solo voice mail, a voice mail broadcast to large team or you could pursue use of automated calling to get the word out depending on the size of audience

SESSION 4.

Make a positive contribution to team coherence, image and spirit.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
14	Identify and explain the needs and objectives of team members	10

Developing Team Objectives

Many companies have mission statements, vision statements, corporate, department and individual goals. These are usually blended together to ensure that everyone in the organisation is moving in the same direction. If the goals are not compatible, groups or individuals in the company start pulling in different directions and the overall progress of the company is affected.

As a team leader, you communicate the objectives that the team needs to achieve on a daily basis. Then you coach them to accomplish them. Ensuring that these daily objectives are achieved is part of a long term plan and essential to being an effective leader.

When the goals of the company, team and the individual are focused in the same direction, they are more likely to be achieved. When everyone is moving in the same direction it is more satisfying and productive.

Identifying Team Tasks

Once you have decided what you want to achieve and who will fill what roles in the team, you must itemise the tasks that need to be completed. It is a good idea to involve the team in this so everyone has some input and understanding of what is involved. The overall process for this is as follows:

1. state the goal to be addressed
2. list the tasks required to achieve that goal
3. group similar tasks under one heading (For example, inventory control)
4. determine the resources needed to complete each task
5. define the role, responsibility, authority and accountability for each task
6. allocate team roles to the appropriate people.

For a business to be successful, setting specific performance goals that can be tracked and measured is essential. However, big business goals can seem daunting. Breaking down the goals into smaller objectives makes it easier to monitor and track progress. It is not enough for a business to set goals and expect employees to achieve them. Team leaders must communicate these goals to the employees, create awareness of the importance of achieving these goals and provide motivation to reach the goals.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
15	Identify and explain the methods and techniques for building team coherence and spirit	15

Techniques that successfully build a harmony are an vital key to continued business growth. A sensible team incorporates a whole that's bigger than the total of its components with members who have commitment to shared goals and who understand their role at intervals the team. This text asks 5 queries whose answers can offer team building techniques that may help to realize a successful and coherent team.

1. Is every team member's role clearly outlined and established within the team?

This can be half of the basic groundwork. Every member wants to know what role they need among the team thus that they will understand what is expected of them. They also want to grasp what the roles of all the opposite team members are and the way they fit in to the overall picture.

During this manner every team member can build up a image of where they stand and where each other person stands. This can be a typical distinguishing trait of all successful teams. The members apprehend where they match in and where the others work in. This may additionally facilitate to remove conflict within the team.

2. Is there a method to avoid or resolve possible conflicts arising inside the team?

There wants to be team building techniques in place to eradicate conflicts in a team. A team must be coherent so as to be successful. It is usually best when individual team members know that they alone aren't accountable for resolving conflicts involving themselves. They have to grasp that there's an overall policy to deal with such matters as and after they arise.

3. Are there adequate channels of communications open to every team member?

Communication is one among the most effective team building techniques. It covers simply concerning everything. Way too many problems arise as a result of somebody does not apprehend one thing that they must know. Keep all channels of communication between members open in the slightest degree times. Beware of data overload though. Generally those that receive an excessive amount of data merely shut off. This creates a state of affairs that's every bit as dangerous as having too very little information.

4. Are team members allowed to feel better about team successes?

Employment should be a lot of than simply a job. Every member should feel half of one thing vital and important. This is often where commitment and engagement comes in. When team members feel an necessary half of a team they must also feel that they have the proper to celebrate any major success that a team has. After all, they're the rationale for the success. Each individual is a crucial cog in the general wheel and this fact should be recognised. The celebration of a team's success will be a straightforward affair, perhaps simply an announcement saying "well done" to everyone. It will after all be one thing abundant grander.

5. Does the team have a positive angle in general?

A positive perspective is very important to success. Seeing the glass as half-full is best than seeing it as 0.5-empty. A positive attitude, especially coming from team leaders, will spur on all team members and contribute to the overall success of the team. Create certain that every one criticism includes a positive edge and always notice one thing good regarding any failure.

But good teams don't just happen. They are the result of an intentional effort on the part of the company's owner to create a work environment in which every person feels like his/her contribution is a vital and valued part of the organization's success.
Here are some tips to help jumpstart the team-building process in your small business:
Establish clearly defined roles.
Successful teams share a common characteristic - every person knows the role they are expected to play as well as the roles of the other team members. As the business owner, it's your job to make sure that every employee clearly understands the role he/she plays in the organization. You can accomplish this by ensuring that every employee has received an accurate job description that is reviewed annually, perhaps during the employee's annual review. Tools such as organizational charts and staff meetings provide a way for employees to see how they fit into the big picture and to discuss role-related conflicts.

Maintain open channels of communication.
Communication is the building block of an effective business team. With that in mind, it is critically important for you to create and maintain open channels of communication with your employees. This means not only maintaining a clear channel of communication between you and your employees, but also helping your employees maintain clear channels of communication with each other.
E-mail, voice mail, and other communication advances make it easier than ever before for team members to keep in touch. Even so, there's no substitute for constantly reminding your employees that your door is always open and that you are always willing to listen to their concerns.

Develop a way to resolve conflicts.

Inevitably, your team will experience conflicts. Ignoring those conflicts will only cause them to grow until they become a major problem. So instead of ignoring them, develop conflict-resolution skills with your employees and create a mechanism for them to address grievances if they can't resolve their conflicts on their own. If you don't feel up to the task of teaching your employees how to resolve conflicts yourself, consider bringing in a professional to do the training for you.

Model a positive attitude.

Teams tend to adopt the attitude of their leader. If the leader is positive and upbeat, then team members will tend to be positive and upbeat as well. But if the leader demonstrates a negative or critical attitude, the team will suffer because of the attitude of the team members. By modeling a positive attitude for your employees, you are setting the standard and creating an expectation of the qualities you want to see reflected in your team.

Celebrate achievements as a team.

Since every employee plays an important part in the success or failure of your business, it only makes sense to celebrate your achievements as a team. Depending on the size of the achievement, your celebration can be as simple as a pizza party or as involved as a company trip to the Bahamas. The important thing is that every team member has the opportunity to celebrate a job well done.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
16	Explain how Trust and support of colleagues is gained through applicable behaviours?	5

Supporting Your Colleagues

It is tough when someone you are working with has to battle it out with a mental problem. But it can be helpful if one co-worker knows what to do to support that colleague. It will help everyone cope up with the sudden change of things. Work is a huge event for many of us. We spend the majority of our time working, we tend to have more contact with other people in the work place and it is where we make our money. To be fulfilled with your work is one thing to consider if you want to have a sound mind and healthy mental well-being. Work can be stressful at times but it can be means for us to cope up with all the other things that we go through in life.

Work can be tough on you if someone you work with is having a rough time. He could be dealing with a loss of a loved one or something else. Other problems such as marital and family troubles may be driving your co-worker to his limit. Other mental health issues like having panic attacks or depression could also be a reason. Your co-worker may be described as having an emotional crisis or that they are having a nervous breakdown. Either way, as friends and as colleagues in the workplace, we can do our share of help to support those in need.

It is very important that you know what to do when someone is at their breaking point. It will make a huge impact to your colleagues or friends when they know that someone is there to look out for their wellbeing and sanity. You may feel powerless at first but with good intentions, you can go on and offer your help. To be able to work in an environment where all the members are being cared for can increase their chances of coping up with their problems.

SESSION 5.
Respect personal, ethical, religious and cultural differences

Activity	Question Description	Mark
17	Explain difference Between Work Groups and Teams	5

Work Groups	Teams
Individual accountability	Individual and mutual accountability
Come together to share information and perspectives	Frequently come together for discussion, decision making, problem solving, and planning.
Focus on individual goals	Focus on team goals
Produce individual work products	Produce collective work products
Define individual roles, responsibilities, and tasks	Define individual roles, responsibilities, and tasks to help team do its work; often share and rotate them
Concern with one's own outcome and challenges	Concern with outcomes of everyone and challenges the team faces
Purpose, goals, approach to work shaped by manager	Purpose, goals, approach to work shaped by team leader with team members

Activity	Question Description	Mark
18	Explain the importance of showing respect	5

Importance of Respect

Respect is a very broad term when people use it. What is the definition of respect? When I looked it up in the dictionary, I found out the dictionary definition is: to show regard or admiration of something or someone. I see respect as a universal characteristic. Respect to me, is a way of showing someone that you think highly of them and well, respect them! Respect is a very important part of life. If a person is respected, it makes him fell good and in return, he or she respects you. Respect is important to me because if a person didn't respect anyone, he himself would not be admired, and over time, he would grow up to be a very rude and inconsiderate person. Rudeness and kindness are also two very big components of respect. If you are rude to people or a person, you are disrespectful. If you are purposely mean or nasty to people, you are disrespectful. Respecting teachers such as Mr. Wellman is a very important part of education and life.

Activity	Question Description	Mark
19	How do you demonstrate respect to your team?	5

There is a Golden Rule of behaviors that can be found in many religions and philosophies. It is usually summarized as, "Treat people as you would want them to treat you." Here are some tips to help you apply this rule in building RESPECT to others in your team and in personal life.

- Relate to them as individuals – every person is different and they have different needs, ways of expressing themselves and relating to others. Get to know their names, their family names, what is important to them and what are they goals.
- Encourage individuality – You can't expect conformity and productivity at the same time. Everyone is different in personalities, styles and creativity. When you encourage them to embrace their individual uniqueness to support the team you will enable them to perform at a higher level.
- Show trust in their capability – Once you know your team members' capabilities, competence levels and capacity, assign to them tasks to match their capabilities with a little of stretch. Then allow them to do their task without too much interference. They will feel that you trust them and will reward you with higher performance.
- Positively communicate with them – A couple of old proverbs say, "The tongue has the power of life and death." And, "Pleasant words are a honeycomb, sweet to the soul and healing to the bones." It is in your power to speak life or death into your relationships. So chose to speak life with positive and pleasant words rather than harsh and negative tone and phrases.
- Expect differences – People with speak differently, act differently, and perform differently as well as respond differently. Expect to observe different reactions and contributions from your team members. Embrace it and celebrate the differences in order that they will feel valued for their contribution to the team.
- Care for their needs and feelings – Your team members are not robots. They have lives outside their work. Be aware of their feelings, needs and be flexible in how you deal with them. This will build rapport with them and loyalty to you and your leadership.
- Talk straight – To build trust your team needs to know that, "what you say is what you mean," and, "what you say is what you will do." Do not use flattery or beat around the bush. Be gentle yet be straight. They need to know where they stand with you at all times. This will bring you respect and gives them freedom to perform at higher levels.