SPECIFIC OUTCOME 2 & ASSESSMENT CRITERIA

What you must be able to do

Prepare for a technical practitioners meeting. You will be assessed against these criteria:

Physical arrangements

Venue selection, facilities, technology required and relevant supporting information — relevant to the type of meeting.

Documented outcomes

The intended outcomes of the meeting are clear, concise and well documented.

Timeous invitations

Meeting invitations are extended to relevant participants timeously.

Agenda distributed

The agenda and other supporting documentation are completed and distributed.

Physical arrangements — nothing left to chance

The outcome of a meeting is heavily dependent on the preparation and input into it. Four arrangements must be in place:

Venue selection

Size and interactive capability affect the outcome: participants who must move between groups need the space for it. The venue must be accessible, and located where participants will not be distracted.

Facilities

Driven by the meeting type, the outcome required and the resources used. Where resources need extra facilities, arrange their availability in advance.

Technology

If delegates must work online, the venue needs internet access; any equipment participants must use has to be made available — and tested.

Support information

User guides and additional information gathered by the company must be readily available to the presenter and participants.

Notification — make the meeting easy to attend

1. It is the organisers' responsibility to ensure everyone is notified of the date, time and venue of the meeting, as well as the main issues to be discussed.
2. A consistent meeting day, time and location — e.g. the first Friday of the month in the same room — helps people make it a habit and cuts notification costs.
3. Choose a space private enough for strong disagreements, where only the members of the group will be while you are using it.
4. Make sure the room is open and set up properly: enough chairs, seating in a circle, and the chairperson seated where everyone is visible.
5. The outcomes of the meeting must be outlined in the invitation, with the requirements of the meeting — sent out timeously so participants can prepare themselves accordingly.

Outcomes and invitations

DOCUMENT THE OUTCOMES

1. Intended outcomes are clear, concise and well documented
2. Participants understand what is expected of them — and in which format it must be returned
3. The agenda is built around the outcomes
4. Afterwards, success is measured against the outcomes

INVITE TIMEOUSLY

1. Include date, time, venue, purpose and the meeting's outcomes
2. Send early enough for participants to prepare and study the documentation
3. Schedules can be arranged so the right people attend
4. Confirm attendance and arrange stand-ins where needed

Preparing the agenda

1. The agenda is a list of the most important issues for the members to discuss — the responsibility of the chairperson and the secretary.
2. It is drawn from the Matters Arising of the previous meeting: tasks needing a report-back, matters that needed further information, and matters deferred to this meeting. The chairperson reads the previous minutes to prepare.
3. Arrange items in order of priority and allocate time for each discussion; familiarise yourself with each area of discussion.
4. An agenda gives people time to plan, do assignments and bring the necessary information — it can be printed and distributed in advance, or written up where everyone can see it.
5. It is not set in stone: additions can be discussed and approved at the start, and the chair may set a maximum time per topic if there is a lot to get through.
6. The last item is General / Any Other Business — for short items not included on the agenda.

PREPARE THE MEETING

The standard agenda

An agenda should include all of the following items that apply to your group:

#	Agenda item
1	Additions to and approval of the agenda
2	Reading, corrections and approval of the previous meeting's minutes
3	Announcements and correspondence to be dealt with
4	Treasurer's report
5	Committee reports
6	Unfinished business — issues left over from previous meetings
7	New business — then General / Any Other Business

Meeting portfolio

Draft the notice, agenda and invitations for the meeting you will chair — logbook evidence.

A meeting is won before it starts.

Venue » facilities » technology » support information » outcomes outlined in the invitation » timeous notification » an agenda in priority order with time per item — preparation turns meeting time into decision time.
